THE MITUATION. Those who built hope upon the small number of persons reported stricken with the fever Thursday will find their hopes again blasted on perusing the official record of the plague's work in our midst yesterday. Estimating from official and unofficial sources, the number of yesterday's victims is nearly as great as the maximum reports of " present epidemic; and the increased proportion of deaths shows that the disease is growing more malignant. As long as there victims with its reach the tever will rem' an with us, and the people may as well make minds to this fact. Official reports to the board of health for the twenty-four hours ending at six o'clock last evening show twenty-two new cases, of of which six are whites and sixteen colored. Undertakers report nine deaths, of which seven are whites and two colored. The total new cases to that hour is eight hundred and eight, and of deaths two hundred and thirty-

REPORTS received at Chicago from three hundred and eight counties in the States and Territories of the northwest show the total acreage of spring wheat to have been 10, 665,935, against 9,514,793 last year, and the yield per acre slightly larger. The aggregate dencis is estimated at 137,850,000, agains 108,745,000 in 1878.

Our telegraphic advices from New Orleans announce General Hood's condition quite ritical. Another of his children was stricken with the fever yesterday.

The lists of new cases and deaths furnished by the board of health, and published below, show a steady increase of yellow-fever, principally, however, among the colored people. HELPLESS TEMPHIS DISCUSSED IN NEW conk commercial checks.

The York correspondence of the Cincinnati Enquirer, twenty-seventh: "New York merchants, who view the yellow-fever epidemic in Memphis purely from a commercial standpoint, say that Memphis is virtually cut off from the New York trade. One firm and that orders received from that city had not been filled, for the reason that it was not possible to tell when goods could be delivered there. Moreover, a Memphis buyer might be stricken after he had ordered the goods; very many bad debts had been made through the fever taking off the head of a Memphis business house. Memphis has a reputation for inviting fever through the ill condition of her streets and sewage, and the feeling had become so general against her that her trade was rather refused than sought. She did nothing toward making the city healthy. Another merchant said that in years past he had a good trade in the city and its surrounding country, but since FORK COMMERCIAL CIRCLES. that in years past he had a good trade in the city and its surrounding country, but since, the fever of last year he had not cared to sell goods there, and he refused all orders unless on a strictly cash basis, which, of course, was not to be expected. He had rather lose the entire trade than suffer the losses and inconveniences that he had experienced in the last two years. This view was expressed by several other tradeemen."

**MEMPHIS PHOTOGRAPHED.**

A northern exchange thus refers to Memphis and attempts to describe its surroundings. The picture is somewhat amusing, wonderfully exaggerated, and altogether absurd: "Memphis hes on the east bank of the Mississippi river, just below the mouth of Wolf river, on the third Chickasaw bluff. At that point the Mississippi rouns due south in a sublime expanse of rolling, tumbling, rushing water sufficient to carry off the excrement and filth of a continent. Immediately east of the river, a d about three-fourths of a mile therefrom, there rune parallel with it a deep gully extending from Wolf river to a point below the southern extremity of the deep gully extending from Wolf river to a point below the southern extremity of the city which connects with the river. At this point when the river is at a high stage it flows over into the ravine; and when it falls flows over into the ravine; and when it falls leaves the water in the gully—a bar being formed across its mouth. Into this place the excrement and offal of the city are drained, and in warm weather it becomes a seething, bubbling mass of putrid matter. Bayou Gayoso is the name of this Golgotha of putresence. From its foul surface disease and death are constantly exhaling ing in hot weather. There is no stone underlying the city. Its streets are paved with Nicolson pavement, and are rotten and rotting in holes in every direction. The rain water fall into the broken places, finds its way underneath the wooden pavements, and becomes stagnant, foul and putrid. The rot-ting wood, the stagnant water and filth arising from the use of the streets conjoin to make a large area of most unhealthy surface. The yellow-fever having found a lodgment in a place so favorable for its propagation and reproduction, little surprise is felt by those who are acquainted with Memphis and its surroundings to find it again reappearing so early and so fatally this season. Nor need any be surprised to find it a constant inhab-itant of the place, to be diffused every sum-mer henceforward until Memphis or the local causes above enumerated are completely

THE LATE REJECTION

Of the Proposition to Settle the State Indebtedness at Fifty-and-Four-Interesting Letter from Hon. Judge Clapp, Setting Forth the Future Policy of the Democratic Party of Tennessee-There Must be no Fellowship between Honesty and Repudiation-Editorial Comments.

The Nashville American, of the twenty-sixth, contains the following interesting letter from Hon. Judge Clapp on the result of the recent election, the editorial comments and the appended latest returns from the election:

Colorado Springs, August 20.—I have noticed the result of the recent election with deep regret and mortification, but not with surprise. My experience as a citizen of Mississippi satisfied me that any people may be educated or seduced into repudiation, and hence, as you may possibly remember, my first fight in the legislature was in opposition to the cowardly dodge in the Democratic platform stipulating for a reference to the popular vote of any proposed settlement of platform stipulating for a reference to the popular vote of any proposed settlement of the State debt. My speech was printed at the American office, and, possibly, you may have a copy. It so, you will find that I predicted the result of such an tregular, undemocratic and unconstitutional measure. Hence, I say I am mortified but not surprised at what has occurred. The question now is, what next? I am more than gratified at the bold and manly ground taken by the American. There can be no fellowship between light and darkness, between honesty and repudiation. Whatever double or doubtful aspect the question may assume abroad, and repudiation. Whatever double or doubtful aspect the question may assume abroad, we know what was meant by nine-tenths of those who voted against the fifty-and-four settlement, and no true Democrat or any citizen who wishes to sustain the honor or reputation of the State of Tennessee, and to vindicate the cause of honesty and fair dealing can affiliate with those who have besmirched the character and blurred the escutcheon of the State. Much less can we afford, without a descript and persistent expediency of calling a session of the legis-lature, in view of any exigency likely to arise from the existence or prevalence of the yel-low-fever. For heaven's sake, let not this affliction be added to the horrors of the scourge. I am happy to say that in this pure, exhilarating atmosphere the health of my wife and myself has been greatly benefited, and we hope to return home, when practicable, with a new lease of life. Very truly,

Nashville American editorial: "We publish in this issue a characteristic, manly letter trom Judge Clapp on the recent election. He opposed the plan of submission, and predicted the result. His final acceptance of it was simply as a choice of evils the statesman sometimes has to make. The American also opposed this plan, and only accepted it in the last moment, when all others had failed. As an extra constitutional method, we could not an extra-constitutional method, we could not have supported it, but for the fact that it was as presented mere surplusage, legislative action at last, and that alone, would have made the settlement legal. The popular vote would have conferred no validity; and it said of the rote the settlement if now in spite of the vote the settlement, if now made by the legislature, if that were a possibility, would be legal and constitutional. As Judge Ciapp says, the next thing is a straightforward policy. The day for a compromise on a patchwork platform is past. Every true Democrat will now earnestly labor for party harmony and unity, on a square, just and honorable policy. Such unity is not only the only unity desirable; it is the only unity possible. It is the course which will secure the largest number of followers. The position of our correspondent, who defends a vote for rejection, encourages the hope that there are many more like him on that side who would not how to expediency, and who will would not bow to expediency, and who will be found standing with him for the adoption WASHINGTON, August 25.—August returns by the Democratic party of the best policy, a straightforward, honest policy. To the Brethren of the Ancient Order United to men of Tennessee: men of Tennessee:

THE distress of last year is again repeating itself in our ranks. The death roli is increasing, and sickness among its members multiplying we have given and are giving all possible care and at tention to those in affliction. Our funds are already exhausted, and unless ald promptity comes, air further efforts on our part will be in vain. With reluctant hearts we appeal to our brethren in this state to assist us in this direful calamity to give to the best of their ability. The Grand Lodge having aided us as far as their funds would permit, in assisting the brothers to leave, and in benefitting the sick and distressed, further and from the Grann Lodge cannot be looked for by us. Therefore, we appeal to you; the "widow's mite" will be acceptable; prompt action is necessary. We hope, for the sake of the Order, that our appeal will meet with a hearty response and your cordial approval.
